WEEKLY NEWS LETTER

Published at weekly intervals, September 1, 1914, at the office of the publisher, 1000 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., under the name of the Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1914. WHOLE NO. 162

INDUSTRIAL BRUTALITY TYPIFIES WEALTH'S CONCEPTION OF HUMAN LIBERTY

As a logical consequence of the theory of man's ownership in man, that man is but a tool for productivity, that man is simply a cog in the industrial mechanism when man is a wage-worker, follows the shooting of miners, women and children at Ludlow.

Acceptance of this theory justifies and naturally leads to the maintenance of private armies, the usurpation by private citizens of governmental functions, the outraging of justice, the murder of innocents by paid Hessians, the brutalizing of the masses by the industrial machine, the shooting of miners, women and children at Ludlow.

The son of the richest man in the world gave unqualified sanction to this principle when he told the American people, through a mouthpiece of their national representatives, that he was determined to maintain his opposition to all efforts of the miners to secure the right to organize. Only through organization can the workers establish control over themselves, hence over "man in themselves."

"I am the state," declared Louis XIV of France. Mr. Rockefeller echoes the same sentiment. His private army deals death and destruction in the Colorado coal fields because the miners refuse to work under conditions that he deems proper.

What memories of stories of that land across the seas, where all men are free and equal, must flit mockingly through the minds of those who are so ready to defend the rights of the rich and the powerful against the rights of the poor and the weak.

Can a law-loving American say this condition of affairs is the consequence of our institutions? Let no one fancy that the theory of man's ownership in man is confined to Colorado, West Virginia, and Northern Michigan, or that only in the mining industry does it obtain.

The same principle of man's ownership in man, the same principle of the right of the rich to the land, the steel, tobacco, harvest, and other trusts and their allies, both great and small. Their attitude toward justice and their moral code are identical with that of Louis XIV of France.
